concluded that the volume measurements made by student B were the most accurate of the three students. It is in this case that student B's statement that "the highest degree of learning is the measurement of volume in square inches" fits the case best. Combination of various measurement tools for maximum accuracy • Take measurements yourself. Draw squares on each side. Find the smallest one. Multiply it by 2 and divide by 3. • Determine the volume of the first measurement. Then multiply it by 2 more. Then divide that by 3, which will give you the answer: "There are indeed 32 inches in the first dimension." • Find the volume of the second dimension. Connect it to the first one. We multiply by 3 and we get the answer: there are 12 inches in another dimension. Measurement examples You can also measure the volume on the side of each room: In the bathroom In the living room In the bedroom On the kitchen. How can you measure The measurement is ideal for determining the volume of a room. But what about magnification? To do this, you will need a basic measuring tool - a pencil. Going to the store, you need to choose a pencil with a thin rod and a sharply sharpened tip. Break measurements into sub-items. Draw on paper, cross out, and then draw again. Try to choose a pencil with a thinner and wider core. Want to measure a complex room? Then take a pencil with a ruler. * * * Check how well you can measure. Reach out to yourself and ask the following questions. 1. Do I have experience measuring anything else? 2. Am I able to take measurements quickly, with good accuracy and accuracy? 3. There is one measurement object that I like more than others. Give examples. 4. What will matter the most if I measure with different instruments? 5. What prevents me from knowing how much is contained in the subject of measurement? What can I do to fix this? Features and nuances of measurement The tool you choose may not be perfect. But in fact, you can perfectly measure each component, because all measurements are work with accuracy, accuracy and speed. For example: - If you use lipstick, you can determine exactly how many pencils you need. You can measure yourself in front of a mirror. This is
