You can set up the proxy on your PC in two different ways: 1) You can use the standard Internet Explorer settings (via Control Panel), so that the proxy is always set automatically and off-line. 2) You can manually change the proxy setting by selecting the preferred value from a list of predefined ones or by filling in the empty fields with the information you want. This second method is recommended because you can change the proxy in any moment, and you don't need to close and relaunch the browser in order to configure the changes. Furthermore, you can customize the proxy settings to be used in different situations and even set the DNS settings, which is a very helpful option if you want to block certain sites. Effect of bacitracin on intestinal nutrient transport. The effect of bacitracin on nutrient transport across the intestinal mucosa was studied using the everted sac technique in rats. It was found that bacitracin (50 mg/kg, i.p.) significantly inhibited both Na+-dependent and Na+-independent glucose transport across the rat jejunal mucosa. The sodium-independent glucose transport was inhibited to an extent comparable to the sodium-dependent transport. At low concentrations (1 micrograms/ml), bacitracin increased the intestinal transport of all amino acids and urea. These effects of bacitracin on nutrient transport were reversible and were unrelated to the effect on the activity of the brush border membrane-bound enzymes. The results indicate that a reduction of the intestinal transport of glucose or amino acids by bacitracin may have an effect on the availability of nutrients and their absorption.
