· An adventure game with a varied story-driven gameplay, as you make your way through to find out what's going on · An office that is empty during the day. It's just you and the shadows. Can you be the only one in this office? · Pick up and solve the puzzle of what's going on around you · Go through an interesting story. Discover what happens after you finished your work. · Minigames – figure out what you need to solve, collect and take to the next level · An ambient soundtrack · A dedicated AI that won't let you rest Some levels contain stealth mechanics Some levels contain a puzzle in mind with several outcomes, that one would need to figure out before moving on Audio and visual effects to increase immersion "You're a developer at a fictional company working on a game. You feel really guilty about not finishing the project on time... So you stay to last night. Right when you decided to do that, you see an unknown messenger who says that something's going wrong. Soon you start receiving calls from different callers, but they have nothing to do with the real world. They're watching your behaviour and they're trying to distract you. Can you figure out what's going on, or is it something else... You're going to stay at the office all night and play detective. That's all there is to it. You don't have to worry about anything else. Can you handle it?" -MikkoQ: Can there be a volume of chirality for a 3-component fluid Is there a volume of chirality for a 3-component fluid such that, given any orientation of the molecules in the volume, the molecules have some number of chiral centers? A: Yes. If I understand what you are asking correctly, then the answer is yes. For example, you may think that the sign of the volume of chirality of a system will depend on the "signs" of the components. Consider the system with molecules in chiral form: Here, if we subtract the volume occupied by the white molecule from that occupied by the green molecule, we would have a volume of chirality in the system in the direction of the arrow in the figure, which

“Game of Codes” is a game that uses the minimal aspects of a game to really focus on the atmosphere. In the game you can buy little effects like fog and audio, but mainly you play the game by solving puzzles. I suppose that this game was inspired from the design of Fez or Monument Valley, which I believe are both beautiful games and as you can see in our trailer, the game uses minimal aspects of a game to focus on the atmosphere. The game is visually beautiful, but as mentioned before, it's not a AAA game that is played on a 4K monitor with a controller, its a game that you can play on your phone if you really want to. A Night Before the Deadline, my friend, was no more. My star pupil no more. A Night Before the Deadline, no, no more. And the boss that said this: “You are making a game! Yes, you are doing this!” Made such a laugh! — Why do you make this? A Night Before the Deadline, my friend, was no more. My star pupil no more. A Night Before the Deadline, no, no more. [center][b]A Night Before the Deadline [/b][/center] [blockquote]Developer: Markus Schäfer & Petter Bro
[center][b]Game Description:[/b][/center] [blockquote] [center][b]Your little company is ready to launch a massive software product. It's your job to keep things under control and make sure that nothing goes wrong. If you don't, your clients will move to your competitors and you'll loose a lot of money. You need to find a solution for each crisis as they come and that's why you work all the time. But this particular night you feel quite tired and start to doze off. Suddenly you find yourself in a completely different place. Your desk has been moved and you have a pile of code fragments in front of you. Who is the mysterious person who left you this list of fragments? You have to find out all the puzzles, make a plan and solve them. It is not as easy as it seems. The fragments don't fit together and you have to search for the correct combinations. But once you know how to arrange them you'll finally see the full picture. The answer will reveal itself to you after you successfully completed the adventure. [b]The gameplay is very short and features few puzzles, so you won't get bored after a few hours.[/b] Your little company is ready to launch a massive software product. #### What's new in A Night Before The Deadline:

Process - An Excel God's Way All's well that ends well. As we proved earlier this week, there's no silver bullet to make a selection and process it quickly in to the media. There's an art to it that requires skill. Isle of Wight Deal deadline already passed As the deadline loomed last week, the selection of just 41 players took as long as a fortnight. Each round of interviews with the selected players was done with time to spare before the day's games. Could we have done it any faster? The short answer is "no". To get an answer that didn't immediately throw up red flags. Apparently a good time to negotiate or change the terms of a contract All things considered, it was one of the most organized press conferences we've ever seen and despite none of the members of the panel being efficient, there were standard and emailed questions answered. Interestingly, none of the press presenters wanted to go with the favourite format, which felt like something of a passive choice. The results of the tournament are already known but it's how the press handled the news that makes it such an interesting edition. The deadline for contract agreement was 2pm and only one player was to be handed to the FA that day as it was too late to change the process. A pretty pragmatic choice. The only problem? It didn't seem to work that well. Why? Let's imagine we're the independent fans who have no connection to The FA or the FA commission. We fill your inbox every morning with news and results and you know it's a good day when the winners are either talking of leaving the league or the most glorious stories are in the middle of the EPL. We know the deadline was on the 2nd of January and the FA had an announcement that they've selected your favourites on the 1st. We're just getting the press conferences to happen. We have no idea of how it's going to play out just yet. But we know there's a deadline, we expect it to happen. Now, just imagine the FA behind the scenes. They don't want a certain player and require a certain amount of hard bargaining and time to give them what they need. Even if they know it won't play out in the media. Because they can't. We can and we're having just as much fun as the FA's not paying any attention. We've maybe even got less money on the days they make promises
