THE FALLEN HORDE. For unknown reasons, the Land Between was replaced with the corrupt world of Dragneel, covered with thornbushes and ridden with monsters that would hunt people down. The warriors of the Land Between are scattered, facing a fierce enemy, with only their memories of the past to help them. However, one day, a monster called Vaika appeared in the world of Dragneel. The information received from the survivors of the Land Between led the hunters of the Dragneel world to the legendary Elden Ring Crack, an ancient artifact with a power that the Dragneel world has not seen since long ago. SHARE On June 5, Education Department lawyers told the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 9th Circuit that the Trump administration disagrees with the court's earlier ruling that it was unconstitutional for the federal government to require public schools to provide bathrooms that match the sex listed on a student's birth certificate. Citing a new policy brief released by the department on the issue, DOJ lawyers argued that requiring transgender students to use the bathroom that corresponded with their sex at birth was not harmful to them. They argued that the policy was needed to protect transgender students because of the potential for harassment and bullying. The DOJ brief was filed with the 9th Circuit in January. After Judge Reed O'Connor had ruled in favor of transgender students, it was unclear whether the Trump administration would continue with that legal position. The court has heard oral arguments. Judge Marsha S. Berzon, who had previously sided with the Trump administration, handed the argument down to the court's 11 remaining judges. A spokesperson for the DOJ told The Colorado Independent that "the U.S. Department of Justice was not involved in this ruling and does not agree with the 9th Circuit's ruling." Despite the fact that the administration's position is that transgender students should be able to use the bathroom of their birth gender, there is no documented evidence that this is a problem for transgenders. Former Vice President Joe Biden, who as a senator voted for the Obama administration policy, has indicated he opposes transgender bathroom policies. Biden told a crowd in Iowa that Trump and Pence have "finally awakened people" to the problem of transgender discrimination. Last week in North Carolina, the four-person board that authorizes private and public schools in Colorado voted 2-1 to approve a bathroom ordinance that prohibits transgender students and staff from using a restroom that matches their gender identity. The case was brought by a group called the Colorado Civil Rights Division and a private transgender student named Jane Doe who said she had been discriminated against by a school. The board argued that allowing transgender students to use the bathroom of their choice would "impose substantial and unique societal burdens" by forcing schools to potentially have to deal with all sorts of issues involving privacy, gender verification and security. At least one other Colorado board has been voting on similar measures. State Question 720, which passed in 2018, prohibits the state Department of Education

Mark Daugherty says it has become "awkward" that his brand is pigeonholed as just a farmer or something deeper. The 54-year-old photographer has set up a studio that sits adjacent to his farm in Upper Bankstown, and he said there was no need to bottle his images up to be exclusively for the agriculture industry. "I would have to explain who I was to someone and why they should buy something for $100-$300 — it gets kind of awkward," Mr Daugherty said. "I would like to show the viewer that there's actually more than meets the eye." Mr Daugherty said he preferred to show his customers' unique stories rather than the "cheque-book, spreadsheet view" of farming. "This has been coming more and more from people's views on how agriculture should be shown as a business and a career option — that's a big issue," Mr Daugherty said. "I would like to show an alternative. I was stood in the newsagent and I bought a coffee which was $2.50 or something. I had a $10 camera with me and I was standing in that newsagent and I took one photo of $2.50, one of $1.50 and one of $10, because I think people can understand that we are doing OK — I think that perspective is going to really wake them up to what we're doing here." A turning point for Mr Daugherty's career came when he was invited to show at the Turnbull Street Markets in Sydney to educate people about rural culture. "At the time I was having a shocking winter at home, I was unhappy — I had just lost my wife and was 35 stone when I moved back to my parents' place," he said.
