in the same vein as their b&n series, the game maker pinball revamp, introduction to pinball is a series of 20 8-in-1s from vendors good games, zaccaria, pinball xtreme, and beru. the series covers all the major brands from stern and jersey jacks to gottlieb and farsight. its a pretty neat series, but its not pinball. it doesnt use self destruct balls or fire and brimstone, its got a bunch of less than spectacular machines, but its one of the few options to simulate the real thing. i was hoping one of the top vendors would do their own b&n series, but they dont. maybe this is the closest thing. gottlieb resurrected their infinity series in 2008 with rollin roadster and rolling thunder. it was a lot of fun, but after that they kind of left the series in the dust. other than shining force, most of the other infinity tables were licensed from christie or atari. gottlieb also got into the digital pinball game around the same time. 2008 saw the release of the gottlieb wizard, wizard of the emerald sea, and the last viking. these were all good games with improvements over visual pinball, but werent as well thought out, making them feel a little incomplete. wizard of the emerald sea did have a great set of rules though, so if you are a fan of those things you could probably find its rules on a sheet somewhere. on the internet? turns out it wasnt for awhile. between the rise of internet usage (1999) and the tail-end of the decade (around 2003), new digital pinball machines started to arrive. while the installers for these games werent always easy to find, it was getting more common to see a pinball online. eventually, internet pinball was the only option available. these days, i still speak with people from the old days. theyre the ones who are immersed, those who are aware of the community, and those who have amassed one or more machines to represent their collection. where is the pinball community today?

if youre in the americas, playing offline is legal, else its either only legal to play online or its completely illegal. if youre a bit lucky like i was and find a table on sale for $5, thats what im telling you to do. you will most likely find the installers for both the alp and vibs for both pc and mac at the bottom of this article. download the alp launcher to run the game. you should see an icon on your taskbar (or dock). double-click to open the launcher. click the green refresh button (double-triangle) to update the launcher and load the game. once you click to start the game, it should start up and take you to the game. alp installs as a vsip (visual pinball) which is great and permits linux users to install the fx3. using the installer, i downloaded the alp version (i believe its 5.6 right now) followed by the directx x64 version of the game, and installed them. upon restarting, i get an empty table. at first i thought my usb might bent formatted correctly, but a quick formatting of it cleared the issue. if youre getting the same issue, try using the steam version, download the game through there, right click to open the dxlauncher, and point it to the dx and alp (copy them over to a flash drive with winrar). then, restart the machine and point it at the flash drive. note the versions. you will also need the dll files for each table you want to play. most are here <http://pinball.zensoft.com/download.asp> but from this file you may want to just grab zaps.dll from "game data" as some tables may not have the folder itself. the alp launcher can be a bit confusing, but theres a manual installation tutorial on the page http://pinball.zensoft.com/eng_inst.asp that gets you pretty much up and running. you will need to install the alp manually, it does not auto-install. 5ec8ef588b
